Congratulations, Joe Biden and Kamala Harris! Decency and Competence Return to our Executive Branch Our First Woman and Woman of Color to Occupy Blair House

Out of the Fire and Into the Frying Pan

Michael K. Cantwell

Yes, we averted an unmitigated disaster. It is doubtful that either our democracy or our planet would have survived another four years of Donald Trump.

But can they survive another six years of Mitch McConnell, two of them as Majority Leader? If democracy requires an informed citizenry, is democracy even possible when tens of millions of voters (and at least one member of Congress) believe QAnon claims that “the world is run by a cabal of Satan-worshiping pedophiles”?

Add the fact that we are in the middle of the worst economic collapse in nearly a century and the worst public health crisis in over a century. Joe Biden was on the inaugural platform with Barack Obama the last time a Democratic administration was charged with fixing the devastation wrought by a departing Republican administration, but the damage is far greater today.

Since February 2020, the economy has shed over 10 million jobs and 235,000 Americans have lost their lives to a pandemic that was exacerbated by President Trump’s colossal incompetence and callous indifference. By comparison, “only” some 3.8 million jobs were lost in the eight months before Obama and Biden were inaugurated.

Moreover, when Biden and Harris are inaugurated on January 21, 2021, Democrats will have a reduced majority in the House and “Dr. No” will remain in charge of the Senate. In 2009, Democrats controlled both Houses of Congress, which enabled them to pass the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA) and prevent a second Great Depression. When Obama left office, only Clinton and Reagan had created more jobs during their terms.

Some things remain constant, however. You can bank on Republicans becoming deficit hawks the second a Republican passes the presidency to a Democrat, usually after having exploded the deficit and crashing the economy. Although they aided and abetted George W. Bush in doubling the deficit, Republicans got religion as soon as Obama took office and didn’t shut up about the deficit until Donald Trump was elected, at which point they fell silent again. Expect more selective amnesia and shameless hypocrisy once Biden takes office.

And expect that Republicans will continue to deny four decades of empirical evidence establishing that tax cuts do “pay for themselves” and are in fact a very inefficient way to stimulate the economy, especially when the vast majority of the cuts go to the wealthiest Americans. For example, every quarterly report issued by the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office found that the LEAST effective job creator in ARRA was tax cuts to the wealthy. More recently, the Trump tax cuts of 2017 had little stimulant effect and fell wildly short of paying for themselves.

It’s clear that Joe Biden and Kamala Harris have their work cut out for them. They have promised to reach out to Republicans and work for all Americans. We need to have their backs if Republicans revert to form and put party over country over planet.

Obese Turtle v. Mexican Rapists, Fine Neo-Nazis, and Fat Ugly Woman

June Sandra Neal

After Trump's temper tantrum about non-existent election fraud, Anderson Cooper, normally the most staid and decorous presence on CNN, let loose:

"That is the president of the United States. That is the most powerful person in the world. And we see him like an obese turtle on his back flailing in the hot sun, realizing his time is over."

Cooper later apologized. "... I regret using those words because that's not the person I really wanna be. It was in the moment, and I regret it." I know, I know...journalists don't have the luxury of letting loose. I know that better than most, having written hundreds of political stories, literary reviews and consumer law columns for three newspapers, guest columns for others and major feature stories for NE (formerly Northeast) Magazine. When you're writing about child slave labor or an innocent man prisoned for years, it's really hard not to scream.

I wish Cooper had not apologized. Let's juxtapose "obese turtle" with the daily effluent from Trump's mouth: Mexican rapists, "fine" neo-Nazis, the ridicule of the disabled, and every vulgarity against women ever coined. Wanted: More Moral Outrage.

Remember, Trump escorted Racism to the ball and threw a political tarp over the bodies of the Covid-19 victims to protect his re-election.

Fortunately, many TV anchors and print columnists switched from labeling Trump's "untruths" to "lies." Millions of Democrats and Independents jumped into battle and worked liked never before to get Biden and Harris elected.

Yet too many of these good and decent people are self-flagellating over what Trump has wrought, using an all-inclusive "we." The letters to the editors in this Sunday's major papers were Exhibits A-Z. "We must face what we have done." "We have to accept our failures." One idiot actually wrote that the worst of Trump's detritus is the "rudeness" we've adopted. Really?

Who the hell are "we?" "We" are not responsible for this man's ascension. The onus is on the MAGA hat folks who gathered in rallies without masks, endangering the nation, and who cheered his slurs against minority groups. And on those legislators and government leaders who fouled their oaths of office. When we play the collective guilt game, we reduce the culpability of those who supported him.

This "we" is nothing more than Moral Equivalence as Therapy—and it's dangerous. It blurs the lines between right and wrong, decency and immorality: distinctions that are our only weapons against reversion to primitivism.

The presidency was re-captured, but the next battle has been joined. Biden and Harris face the worst social, public health, and economic crises since FDR, with a civil war bubbling way too close to the surface.

We've got to help now more than ever.

First, publicly call out anyone – whether from the moderate or progressive wings of the party – who engages in the blame game, something that the media is already actively encouraging. Biden and Harris already face a Herculean task getting anything accomplished for America with Chief Obstructionist McConnell in charge of the Senate. They don't need Democrats reverting to their circular firing squad.

Second, campaign for Democratic-sponsored legislation and policies with the same zeal demonstrated during the election process.

Third, if any medium distorts the Democrats' efforts, tell its advertisers you won't buy their products.

Fourth, work to cleanse Florida of the current governor and Republican state legislators, the real criminals who denied the most fundamental right of voting to thousands of returning citizens.

The road back to We the People is going to be very long and very hard.

Random Thoughts

David Kulick

There are many thoughts flying through my head while I contemplate writing an article for The Delray Democrat. For all the disappointment of the election, particularly in Florida, the main thing is that we beat Donald Trump. That was no small accomplishment.

Some of you may have known my mother, Mariane Kulick. She and her partner Sam Lender founded the Democratic Club of Delray Beach many years ago, and she restarted it the day after Donald Trump was elected. Mom was not given to rash pronouncements or wild conspiracy theories so when she said that if Trump were re-elected we would never have another election, it was impossible to ignore. She very well might have been right and hopefully we'll never know because we beat him and maybe he'll go to jail.

Let's give the Republicans credit; they ran a brilliant campaign. As always, they played on the fears of people and we gave them plenty of ammunition. I come from the era of Vietnam protests and we knew that the people yelling "kill the pigs" and calling soldiers "baby killers" were likely agent provocateurs, trying to discredit an entire movement to Middle America.

So when I saw the violence at peaceful BLM protests, I figured the same thing, but with the addition of agents of Russia spreading hatred and anger. We know that's what they did in 2016 and we were told they would do it again. They did. I don't have the computer skills to track Facebook groups to the source, but I'll bet many of those BLM protesters were reading Russian bots.

When I saw the ongoing protests, and they showed mostly the violent ones, I figured we had just handed Trump the election. I was stunned that the polls didn't show what I feared would happen. Sending in federal troops was terrifying to many of us as a preview of what Trump could do, but apparently was soothing to many on the right and middle. Again, the polls showed nothing.

The other big thing was Corona. Trump played a perfect young/old war, asking why we would shut down the country when only old people and people with underlying conditions were likely to die. Why should they not be able to go to bars and clubs? Playing it as economic rather than a health crisis was smart; I can see Steve Bannon's hand in this. A real package to allow companies to pay their employees while things were shut down would have worked, but we didn't get that, and it missed all the gig workers anyway.

But why didn't any of this impact the polls? Actually, I think only one senate race was really off, the others were pretty much within the margin of error and all went the other way. The reason is that people who really never vote, who aren't even reachable by pollsters, did vote, and they voted for Trump. I was fooled by the number of young people who aren't afraid of the word "socialist." But lots of older people are. Their positions may in fact be socialistic, Medicare for All and $15 minimum wage in particular, but Democrats didn't fight back because too many oppose those things or won't fight for them.

We don't have the right-wing communications network either. Air America was all we had and the few wealthy "leftists" let it die. You can go to any small town in America and hear an AM hate radio station. I can't find even a single news radio station anywhere near Miami, much less a progressive one.

In Florida, we didn't have a single piece of literature to hand out that wasn't just Vote By Mail. Well, we did VBM, overwhelmingly so. But once again it wasn't enough. The Democratic Club of Delray Beach produced our own literature explaining WHY someone should vote for Democrats. But as far as I can tell, it was just us. The other clubs, the county, the state party, nothing. I guess they feel that everyone watches MSNBC or listens to Progress on Sirius. They don't. They watch Fox and listen to hate. Listening in Florida, climate change should have been the number one issue. It wasn't.

Still, for all that, we beat Trump. Some things made an impact. I think the Lincoln Project did get through to some Republicans but they voted for Biden and then Republicans down ballot. Look, I thought the 2016 election was over when Trump mocked a disabled reporter, I mean how much more of a creep can you be? When vote totals were so high this year I figured we had it in the bag, who would vote for Trump who didn't vote for him four years ago. Well, as it turns out, plenty of people did.

The good news going forward is that Trump will not be on the ballot in Georgia in January and it's possible that his cult will not turn out if he isn't in power. The other good thing is Stacey Abrams and that may just be enough.

2020—Biden Wins but Dems Leave a Lot on the Table

Rob Resnick

Although there are still the formalities, it is clear Joe Biden has won the Presidency and victory over Donald Trump essential for the future of the country. The vote was much closer than expected in key states including Wisconsin, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Nevada and there were real moments of concern for the campaign at times throughout election night as some “reliable” states came in closer or later than expected. In any case, Biden exceeded 270 electoral votes and will become President. Despite the celebration, Democrats have reason for concern because the rest of the election was a debacle.

Unfortunately, Biden will not enjoy the support of a friendly Congress - Republicans will likely retain control of the Senate and they narrowed the Democratic House majority. Democrats also did poorly overall in statewide elections (not addressed herein). Therefore, despite Biden’s critical victory, 2020 was an electoral failure for Democrats. How could Trump come so close to winning after four Voters acknowledged Trump’s utter failure to lead in response to the historic pandemic and his abhorrent rhetoric against science, safety measures, and leaders who tried to fulfill their responsibilities to the people. That said, Democrats significantly overplayed their hand on this issue. They did not understand that many voters were more afraid of the economic calamity caused by the pandemic response than of the disease itself. While those with means smugly hunkered down at home, many working families struggled to keep jobs, pay bills, buy food, and supervise children attending school virtually. The risk of COVID-19 paled in comparison to the dire reality they faced. This is exactly why Biden almost lost some otherwise reliable states (e.g., Nevada) and why other Democrats lost.

Rightly or wrongly, many voters grew extremely concerned about the large, angry protests across the country. Initially, Americans wholly supported the paramount goal of the Black Lives Matter (BLM) years of abject failure on every level? For the third straight election, Democrats failed to take control of the Senate even with a strong field of challengers facing a slew of vulnerable, undeserving incumbents. Republicans narrowed the Democratic majority in the House, which is now razor thin and will likely inhibit at least some Democratic initiatives.

How could Trump come so close to winning after four years of abject failure on every level? For the third straight election, Democrats failed to take control of the Senate even with a strong field of challengers facing a slew of vulnerable, undeserving incumbents.

There are many reasons why voters rejected Trump while also repudiating Democratic leaders. The lessons of Reagan and Clinton victories over incumbents demonstrate that an overwhelming number of voters focus on the economy above all other issues. Many voters will excuse or ignore multiple negatives in exchange for the promise of jobs, economic growth, etc. Although their faith in Republicans was grossly misplaced, voters believed they offered a stronger approach to the economy and were apprehensive about a Democratic controlled government. Believing Trump would lose, enough voters chose to deny Democrats control of Congress in fear of a far-left turn.

movement to finally address systemic racism but grew weary of the violence that attended some of the protests, regardless of whether the protestors, provocateurs, or the federal troops sent by Trump were responsible. Republicans effectively utilized the rhetoric of an angry mob and images of scattered incidents of looting while Democrats struggled to find a message supporting BLM’s fight against racism while recognizing the necessity of good law enforcement. “Defund the Police” may not have been intended literally, but it significantly hurt the cause.

Republicans were also successful in scaring voters with imagery of the radical left and the false narrative equating the Democratic Party with the past and present failed totalitarian, Socialist regimes in other countries. Although there is a Democratic Socialist wing of the Party, it is not at all the same as Socialism. However, Trump’s base and most Republicans lacked the intellect or the interest to understand the difference. The Democratic Party has always been the party of freedom and justice. Unfortunately, Democrats chose to ignore the false attacks. They naively believed people would not fall for this messaging when in fact they do every election.

Biden and many Democratic candidates underperformed among Latino voters and the false Socialism label was a significant root cause. This was most pronounced in Florida, making a Florida victory never a real possibility. Many Latino voters fled failed authoritarian Socialist regimes and were susceptible to the false equivalence. The same underperformance occurred in Ohio and Texas. Biden did not need to win those states, but down ballot Democrats did. It would have been much better to see Biden win more states and send Trump and the country more of a message. A stronger Latino vote would have helped Democrats win a few of the Senate and House seats they should have won and needed to win.

Democrats themselves are also responsible for voter skepticism concerning Socialism. Voters across the nation believed Democrats would take the country “far left” with total control of government and this hurt the Congressional races. Although Bernie Sanders, “The Squad,” et al. may be popular in some Democratic circles, they also provide Republicans with divisive targets they can use to scare voters. Although some of the Democrats who lost swing House seats were moderates, they lost because Republicans pushed messaging about the far left if Democrats retained control. All Democrats need to be cognizant of the impact their rhetoric has on the national party and then need to win swing districts, not just their own safe, reliably liberal districts.

The Democratic Party appears poised for an internal battle for control. The Progressive wing of the party wants to advance an intense policy agenda focused on Medicare for All and other issues that play well to the base. The traditional, more moderate Democrats support many of the goals, want to achieve results more through consensus, and recognize the importance of national security, controlling spending, etc. It should not be an “either or” fight, but a recognition that the party needs to coalesce around its core values while adopting a platform and rhetoric that supports a critical national strategy. They must first win elections, and by decent margins, before they can legislate or achieve their objectives. They get nothing if Republicans keep winning. Here is the key – it must be a continuation of the 2020 strategy of appreciating traditional liberal values and priorities while demonstrating a sensible and reasonable approach that appeals to a larger swath of the nation.

“Off the Table”

Michael K. Cantwell

A series of national polls conducted between 2003 and 2009 showed support for a universal healthcare system ranging from 59% to 75%. Yet Sen. Max Baucus, chair of the Senate Finance Committee charged with principal responsibility for drafting the Affordable Care Act, declared single-payer to be “off the table.” Having relinquished their best bargaining chip, Democrats failed to even include a public option in the ACA.

In 2011, Republicans refused to raise the debt ceiling without deficit reduction (an outrageous and hypocritical position given their silence as the federal debt was doubling under George W. Bush). Although reduction could have been achieved through either spending cuts or tax increases (or a combination of the two), tax increases were deemed “off the table.”

Once again, what was “off the table” was widely favored by the American public. A CNN poll found that nearly three-quarters of respondents favored raising taxes on incomes over $250,000, with majorities across all stripes other than Tea Party supporters, 44% of whom nevertheless supported such a tax:

	Total	Dem	Ind	Rep	Liberal	Mod	Cons	Tea Party
Favor	73%	92%	71%	51%	88%	85%	52%	44%
Oppose	26%	7%	29%	49%	12%	15%	48%	56%

A September New York Times/Siena poll found that 72% of respondents supported a $2 trillion stimulus package to extend increased unemployment insurance, send stimulus checks to most Americans, and provide financial support to state and local governments; 67% supported “a public health insurance option that would allow anyone to purchase a government-run health insurance plan”; and 66% supported a $2 trillion plan to increase the use of renewable energy and build energy-efficient infrastructure.

Which of these do you think will be “off the table” if Republicans retain the Senate in 2021?

Howard Simon, Sun-Sentinel, A strategy to protect Amendment 4 and save voting rights: “The injustice inflicted on the voting rights of Floridians by the U.S. Court of Appeals, which overturned District Judge Robert Hinkle’s thoughtful 125-page ruling declaring Florida’s “pay-to-vote” system unconstitutional, cannot be allowed to stand.”

Paul Krugman, New York Times, What’s Not the Matter With Georgia?: “Why, after all, did Biden win Georgia even as he was losing North Carolina, another relatively well-educated state with growing knowledge industries? The answer, in two words: Stacey Abrams.”

Jenn Jackson, Truthout, Yes, 55 Percent of White Women Voted for Trump. No, I’m Not Surprised: “In 2016, the big takeaway was that 53 percent of white women voters cast their ballots in favor of Donald Trump, according to exit polls, helping cement his victory. But, in 2020, white women voters surpassed their 2016 levels of support as, according to exit polls, 55 percent of white women turned out to vote for the president who was recorded saying that men should “grab ‘em by the pussy . . .”

Kenny Stancil, Common Dreams, Here’s a winning message Democrats could use to clinch the Senate in Georgia runoffs: “Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) shared a suggestion on social media: ‘If Democrats take back the Senate,’ he said on Monday afternoon, “we will increase the minimum wage from a starvation wage of $7.25 an hour to a living wage of at least $15 an hour.”

David Leonhardt, New York Times, There Is a Real Opportunity Here That I Think Biden Is Capturing: “The last two Democratic presidents, Barack Obama and Bill Clinton, put a higher priority on expanding health insurance than fighting climate change. Mr. Biden, by contrast, has said he will accomplish his unavoidable short-term priorities — controlling the coronavirus and restarting the economy — in significant part by fighting climate change.”

Paul Krugman, New York Times, A Republican Senate Would Be Bad for Business: “Divided government is all too likely to mean paralysis at a time when we desperately need strong action.”

Juan Gonzalez, Democracy Now, Mainstream Media Has Missed the Real Story About Latinx Voter Turnout: “the key narrative of this election is not whether there was a small shift in the percentage of Latinx voters in some areas of the country turning toward Trump. The main story is that in an election which saw historic turnout, people of color — and especially Latinos — had an unprecedented increase in voting . . . Virtually none of the reports have mentioned this, that for the first time in U.S. history Latinos’ turnout appears to have reached comparable levels to the rates for white and Black Americans.

Yer Mama's a Socialist!

Michael K. Cantwell

H.L. Mencken famously wrote that “no one ever went broke underestimating the intelligence of the American people.” It’s not a lack of intelligence that led 70 million people to vote for Donald Trump, however. It’s lack of information, lack of education, and lack of a nose for a carnival barker.

Trump won Florida in large measure because substantial numbers of people believed the claptrap that Joe Biden is a socialist or controlled by socialists. Anyone who is not a credulous fool is aware that, at its core, socialism involves “collective or governmental ownership and administration of the means of production and distribution of goods,” and no Democrat – not Bernie Sanders, not Alexandria Ocasio Cortez, not Kamala Harris, and certainly not Joe Biden – is advocating that.

compared it to slavery, cementing his place in history as a shameless toady only too happy to desecrate the graves of his ancestors: “You know Obamacare is really I think the worst thing that has happened in this nation since slavery.” Worse than lynchings, Ben? Worse than the KKK?

And let’s not forget former conservative darling Sarah Palin’s obscene, Orwellian claim that the Affordable Care Act, which has insured tens of millions of Americans and saved tens of thousands of lives, had created “death panels.” A clear majority of Americans now favor the ACA while Ms. Palin has been reduced to appearing on The Masked Singer dressed in a purple and pink furry bear costume.

Significantly but unsurprisingly, pollsters found that

“What he, indeed the Democratic Party as a whole, advocates is a government that works for the governed rather than a select few, and that seeks to care for the most vulnerable among us, rather than leave them to a life that is nasty, brutish, and short.”

What he, indeed the Democratic Party as a whole, advocates is a government that works for the governed rather than a select few, and that seeks to care for the most vulnerable among us, rather than leave them to a life that is nasty, brutish, and short. Every time Democrats have attempted to better the lives of Americans, they have been accused of every imagined sin under the sun, beginning with socialism and extending to slavery. Here are two choice selections from the 1935 debate over Social Security:

“Never in the history of the world has any measure been brought here so insidiously designed as to prevent business recovery, to enslave workers and to prevent any possibility of the employers providing work for the people,” Rep. John Taber (R-NY).

“The lash of the dictator will be felt and 25 million free American citizens will for the first time submit themselves to a fingerprint test.” Rep. Daniel Reed (R-NY)

And who can forget Ronald Reagan telling Americans that if Medicare passed, “We are going to spend our sunset years telling our children and our children’s children, what it once was like in America when men were free”? He was shilling for the AMA then, which today (like the overwhelming majority of Americans) supports Medicare.

Closer to the present is the vitriol with which the Affordable Care Act was met. Ben Carson abjectly

Americans’ attitudes towards the ACA depended on whether it was identified as “Obamacare” or the “Affordable Care Act.” Indeed, there are actually voters who don’t know that Medicare is a government program.

During the “Hillary-care” battle in 1994, an elderly woman accosted then-Sen. John Breaux in an airport, urging “Now don’t you let the government get a hold of my Medicare.” And at a town hall meeting during the debate over the Affordable Care Act, a man told Rep. Robert Inglis (R-S.C.) to “keep your government hands off my Medicare.”

The key is educating voters to the reality that the programs on which they and their families depend were all created by Democrats, and that we are saving lives while Republicans are sacrificing them.

Explain that Ron DeSantis is denying Medicaid to 800,000 uninsured Floridians who otherwise qualify under the ACA, thus condemning thousands of them to premature, preventable deaths. Explain to anyone enrolled in Medicare, Medicaid, or Social Security that they’re just as much a socialist as Joe Biden.

It won’t work on Trump troglodytes, like those who drove past our rallies screaming “socialist.” Just yell back, “Yer mama’s a Socialist.” They won’t know what the hell you’re saying, but you’ll feel better.
